Corona

By: Rebekah Morris

The coronavirus, to Longwood, was not seen in reports,
It was experienced through broken hearts and useless passports.
Through cancelled flights and online classes,
Through students and professors suddenly needing blue light glasses.

Road trips were hurried and apartments were ghosted,
Quickly any chance at a normal semester was toasted.
Breakdowns and facetime calls were abound,
It seemed like hope was nowhere to be found.

Despite all these hardships and lost time,
A community formed one we could all call "mine".
For Longwood bleeds white and blue,
It stands as strong as Joanie on the stone-y and the pony that much is true.

Miles apart and houses separated,
A community of scholars we soon created.
For throughout this chaos and threat cloaked in anonymity,
Sometimes the best vaccine is humanity.
